

Helpful Hints

For the first task:

- Read / examine each source carefully. This is the interpretation part!
- Highlight or underline key words; make brief notes beside each source. This is the analysis part!
- Make sure you understand each source to the best of your ability. This is the comprehension part and it's not always easy. Your grasp of key terms and vocabulary is absolutely essential!
- Identify and explain the perspectives in each source. Write about and discuss what's going on in each source or what each seems to be about at a basic level.
- You may do this by referring to or discussing any / all of the following:
 - Main points, concepts, themes, and / or ideas being conveyed
 - Ideological perspective(s) being presented
 - Personal viewpoints / opinions being expressed
 - Any other secondary ideas, such as whether the source seems slanted or biased and reasons that might account for this
- You must also discuss the links between each source and the ideology of liberalism. It is not enough to just say "All three sources are about the ideology of liberalism." Duh...we already know that!
- Remember that there are many different aspects of this complex ideology. For example, liberalism:
 - Can assume political or economic form
 - Has changed over time (from classical to modern and on to 'neo')
 - Is supported or opposed for many different reasons by different groups, nations, and individuals
 - Is used as a basis for governments and political parties, which develop policies based on whether they agree or disagree with its underlying values
- You may also bring in other relevant information to further demonstrate the depth of your understanding. Time may be a factor; focus on the main tasks first!

For the second task:

- Identify and explain one or more relationship(s) among the sources. This can be done in many different ways. For example, you may do any / all of the following:
 - Identify and discuss a common idea / theme / concept they share
 - Identify common or differing perspectives they bring to the main idea / theme
 - Explain how they are similar or different (compare and contrast)
 - Refer to common or divergent underlying values and belief systems
- You may also discuss how any two of the sources are linked together. For example, are they similar in some way or do they relate to a common concept?
