ASSIGNMENTS 3.6

Question 1 of 2 | 25 marks

There are lots of self-assessment tools available to help you explore your interests and how your strengths and characteristics may be suited to some career options. Try some of them out and list the careers that they seem to point to as possibilities for you. Give thought to the questions that they ask you to think about when it comes to you and who you are, what you like to do, where your interests lie, etc. Such self-assessments won't necessarily lead you to your career of choice – but they often make you think – and sometimes think about you in ways you have never thought about before. That can help when you are trying to explore and identify a career path that fits with you.

As the video suggests, use the decision-making steps presented in the video on decision-making and reviewed in this video, to think about careers that might be of interest to you – what career options are of interest; what's important to you in a career; how do the options stack up against what is most important to you? Show the steps in your decision-making and briefly discuss the career that is of most interest to you at this time to explore.
